our work is not done. Our enemies are still alive and have grown desperate. Human selfishness is not easily overcome and the hope of private grain at the expense of the masses of our people is not yet abandoned. It would be shameful, and a pirlable disgrace, if by over-confidence, we should lose the ground we have gained, or if we should fail to push further our advantage. The result of our labor thus far is, indeed, "a signal tribute to the judgment of the American people." In full labth in this judgment our work should continue upon the lines thus far followed until the enemies of tariff reform are driven from their last intrenchment. As the people have trusted us, let us, followed until the enemies of tariff reform are driven from their last intrenchment. As the people have trusted us, let us, above all things, be true to them. Let the light of our campaign be carried into every part of the land where it has not been seen, and where it has been kindled let it be kept brightly burning, still showing the way to better days for the people, and disclosing the plans of insidious foes.

In the years to come, when we look back with patriotic satisfaction upon our participation in the glorious struggle for tariff reform and recall its happy termination, it will delight us to remember every incident of di-couragement as well as of triumph in the people's cause. Then, when we are asked to speak of our proudest political endeavor and to give the best illustration of American intelligence and to pay the highest tribute to the judgment of the American people, we will rehearse the history and the grand result of "The Campaign of Education."

JAMESON'S DIARY.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Jameson's diary will be published tomorrow. Mrs. Jameson and the dead man's brother, in a preface to the work, bitterly attack Mr. Stanley for making Jameson the scapegoat for all the troubles which occurred, and claim that they were due to Stanley's own bad judgment and neglect. They also suggest that, Messrs. Stanley and Bonny are not telling the truth. The cannibal episode, as it appears in the diary, is substantially identical with the account of it contained in the letter to the Emin committee. Jameson adds to his statement of facts: "I would never have been such a beast as to witness the act of cannibalism, but was unable until the last moment to bring myself to believe that it was anything save a ruse to get money out of me."

In his diary, under date of April 9, 1887, Lieut, Jameson, dealing with the start up the Congo, remarks that Stanley sent Burttelot on with all the worst and most Barttelot on with all the worst and most rebellious men in the camp. This action on the part of Stanley, says Jameson, was a strange return for Barttelot's gratuitous hard work. On the 10th, Jameson complains that Stanley rejects his advice to give the sick a period of rest, and compels them to continue the march, "with the result," he adds, "that the camp regards me as a brute and Stanley as a guardian anged."

gardian angel,"

The diary is a record of the daily progress and adventures of the expedition, interspersed with disputes between Stanley and his followers. "For instance," he says, "while marching to Njalama, after ordering that a hundred lashes be given to a man for losing a box of ammunition, Stanley accused me of losing three boxes and said: 'If this happens again we must part.' If this continues, and Stanley reproaches me before the men, I shall not be proaches me before the men, I shall not be sorry when we do part."

The diary records that Stanley degraded three chiefs, the best men Jameson had ever seen among the natives, and only released them from their chains on the intercession of Tippoo Tib. In a letter to his wife, later, Jameson shows that he was becoming discouraged in his naturalist pursuits. He says that with a wealth of available specimens unexampled in his experience, he has no time to get anything. "All my lovely dreams are knocked in the "All my lovely dreams are knocked in the head.
